The life of such a man was, of course, rarely marked by anything so striking as separately to claim record; but it was the even and continuous labours to which he devoted himself that showed that his kindness to men was no fitful or transient emotion; that his benefactions were the result of a plan, and fixed resolution. What he did to-day, that he did yesterday, and would do to-morrow. Even to within the last four or five years his contributions must have amounted to many thousands. In fact, he did in his lifetime what he believed ought to be done. He belonged to that now growing class of benefactors who subscribe great sums of money to alleviate the distresses, and to help the efforts of their fellow men; and who spend the last years of their lives in watching over those works of charity and goodwill which they have initiated. The Illustrated London News has given a series of examples, among which the names of Peasony, Salt (of Saltsire), Mason, and Crossley are conspicuous. These examples have illustrated the plan of life, chosen by men who desire to be useful while they live, rather than to bequeath their wealth for the benefit of others only while they live, rather than to bequeath their wealth for the benefit of others only when they can enjoy it no longer.

The last three or four years of the life of Mr. Horkins have been weariness and pain, supported by the firm belief that his future was in the hands of God, and that after the labours of time there would come a season of conscious rest.

the labours of time there would come a season of conscious rest.

Before the rapid progress of decay set in, Mr. Hopkins was an example of hale and happy old age. Long after he was seventy years old, we have seen him outrun his juniors by many years. From the hilarity of his natural disposition, he took delight in everything that showed that, though he had passed through a long journey, he was neither wasted nor wearied. He had lived indeed a strictly temperate life, having no taste for those excesses which, while they may not injure in some peculiar circumstances, generally bring men down before their natural term. Without being ostentatiously abstemious, all his habits were simple, and thus Nature was not tasked beyond her fair burdens, and was sunny almost to the last. The sight of such sunny almost to the last. The sight of such a man and the close of such a career are full of consolatory lessons, enhanced indeed by the fact that there are thousands of colonists who, directly or indirectly, will be long benefited by the labours of this good old man.

The bill introduced by Mr. Wearne has brought the subject of the liquor traffic before the Legislative Assembly in a manner so direct as to demand an expression of opinion on the part of honorable members. It is supported by a section of the community zealous in the cause of reform—knowing the value of organisation, and ready to make assent to the principle of this measure a political testing point. Under these circumstances, apart from the real merits of the question, any bill of the kind would be sure to receive respectful attention. This may perhaps account for some of the "trimming" which has already characterised the debate. Right-minded men deplore the evils of Right-minded men deplore the evils of unrestrained indulgence, and would rejoice unrestrained indulgence, and would rejoice to see a more general observance of temperance in all things. Few would deny that intemperance of every kind is wrongful and injurious, or that the excessive use of infoxicating drinks has become a national calamity. But opinions differ both in regard to the root of the evil and the best means to be adopted for its eradication. This is seen whenever the subject is debated—in the social circle, on the platform, or in the Legislature. It was evident in the agitation which preceded the introduction of the bill now before the Assembly, and in regard to which there are two or three points that call for special notice.

introduction of the bill now before the Assembly, and in regard to which there are two or three points that call for special notice.

Public meetings, having for their object the suppression of intemperance, have during the last twelve months been held all over the colony. These meetings were attended by persons who discountenance the common use of all intoxicating drinks, and look upon the trade in fermented and spirituous liquers as an unmitigated evil. There have been also present others deeply impressed with the statistics accumulated to show that the immoderate consumption of intoxicating drinks is the cause of much of the immorality, crime, and pauperism which prevail all over the world. Both parties hold that the drinking customs are largely promoted by the enormeus number of public-houses which exist throughout the colony. They made common cause against a common evil, and agreed generally that an alteration of the licensing system was urgently needed. Many, however, who signed petitions in favour of reform, and who would gladly see licensed houses restricted in number and subject to more stringent regulation, are not in favour of the measure now before the Assembly. Its most ardent promoters have moved steadily towards their object from the first initiation of the movement, but speakers at public meetings have often spoken of "regulation" in the general acceptation of that term, and not of the power to close absolutely all houses licensed for the retail sale of intoxicating liquor.

The bill itself affords a good illustration of the gradual change of attitude which has been assumed in regard to this matter. Its title is A Bill to "regulate" the common retail sale of fermented and spirituous liquors. But where is the law, or rule by which "the common retail sale of fermented and spirituous liquors. But where is the law, or rule by which "the common retail sale of fermented and spirituous liquors. But where is the law, or rule by which "the com-

A Bill to "regulate" the common retail sale of fermented and spirituous liquors. But where is the law, or rule by which "the common retail sale" is to be controlled? To say that "abolition" and "regulation" are synonimous is to be guilty of confusing terms quite as distinct as "temperance" and "total abstinence." Then the preamble of the bill states that it is expedient to confer upon the ratepayers of municipalities power to "restrain" the common retail sale of fermented and spirituous liquors; but there is nothing to show that the limits within which it may be premitted as idjuors; but there is nothing to show that the limits within which it may be permitted are geographical, and that there are other limits within which the retail sale may be abelished on the vote of a majority of two-thirds of the ratepayers within those limits. This power is given by the fourth clause, which provides that if, after a decision in favour of extending the bill to any municipality, "any person, whether holding a publican's license or not, shall sell any spirits, ale, porter, beer, wine, cider, perry, or other intoxicating liquor, except as excepted in this provise to the third section of the Sale of Liquors Licensing Act of 1862, he shall be deemed to sell without a license within the meaning of that Act."

By the Licensing Act of 1862 the penalty

meaning of that Act."

By the Licensing Act of 1862 the penalty for selling without a license is for the first offence, thirty pounds; and for every subsequent such offence, fifty pounds, together with full costs. The proviso to the third clause referred to save:—

"This shall not apply to any person selling any distilled or spirituous perfume really as perfumery and not for drinking: nor to any person who practices as an apothecary, chemist, or druggist, administering or selling any spirits as medicine or for medicinal or chemical purposes; nor to any person who, being duly registered as a wholesale spirit declare, shall dispose of any quantity of liquor, if such quantity do not include less than two gallons of any one and the same description of liquor, and is not delivered in quantities less than two gallons at one time; nor to any duly registered brewer; nor to any wholesale dealer in wine or beer, selling and delivering the same in quantities of not less than two gallons of one and the same kind and at one and the same time: nor to any grower or maker of wine, cider, perry, beer, or other termented liquor made from grain or fruit the produce of the colony, selling the same in any quantity not less than two gallons at one time, or in any less quantity if sold on the premises on which such wines or liquors last aforessid are made; nor to any confectioner or other person solling ginger beer, spruce beer, or other refreshing drink, not being spirituous or fermented; nor to any 'military canteen, duly established under the regulations of her Majesty's service.''

beer, or other refreshing drink, not being spirituous or fermented; nor to any military canteen, duly established under the regulations of her Majesty's service."

Practically, this bill, if passed into law, would give a power which would be exercised in very few localities, while it would leave unremedied, so far as the colony as a whole is concerned, the evils that at present exist. Its preamble, however is so general as to admit of amendments in committee which may completely change its character without making it inconsistent with its title. The present Licensing Act is not creditable to the intelligence of the community; but the change proposed in the bill recently introduced, while it would be distasteful to a very large section of the community, would not interfere with those who favour the "keg system," as explained by the MINISTER FOR LANDS. The bushman might still throw his two-gallon keg across his horse—take the liquor to his hut, and with boon companions "see it out."

The first work of every reform must be to change the convictions of men, for it is impossible to enforce any law which is repugnant to a considerable proportion of a free people. And the figures which were quoted by the mover of the second reading of this bill, though respectable in number, are not sufficient to justify any reasonable expectation that the measure in its present shape will find a place among the statutes of the colony. It is in fact one which emanates from a section of the people who believe that total abstinence from intoxicating liquors is at the root of social and political wellbeing. The tectotal-lers have gradually worked their way from the ground of moral suasion and Christian obligation to the politice-economical phase of the total abstinence are the only cure for excess will not be a a universal or general application, and it must not be forgotten that, between the confirmed drunkard and the total abstinence is the only cure for excess will not bear a universal or general application, and it must not be forgot

COPPER AT BOUERE—On the 16th September, a correspondent of the bubb bispatch writes thus:
—I am delighted to inform you that at last, in apite of our great cry about gold and precious stones, which was but empty rascality, we can now boildy lay claim to a marvellously rich tract of copper-bearing country. Mr. Charles Campbell, an intelligent Dane, coming from the and on his arrival made known his fortune to Mr. 3. Becker and myself. He brught with him some rich specimens, one of which, with the aid of a frying pan and the forge bellows, we roughly smelted, and proound an abundance of copper, whithis in colour and very hard, premising, I should fearer, a large percentage of silvers of the control of the surface. The country is about 100 miles from Bourke, and Bourke will be made earner of operations. A party of gentlemen start to-morrow. Mr. Becker was to have been of their number, but circumstaces have prevented this. I am sorry this is the case. It he has the most likely man in the place to see at once the importance of the discovery. Mr. Campbell has near already there at work securing water.

THE ENRIETICS CONCERTS.—Yesterday evening a released of the "Creation" took place at the Enrichment brilding. About 700 of the chorus were present, with all the principals; the result is a credit to the chorus very present, with all the principals; the result is a credit to the chorus perhaps without a successful issue. It is also the more creditable, because the festival is, so to speak, a "colonial production." the organ was built here, the principal vocalists are long residents or natives of New South Wales, and the members of the chorus perhaps without any exception have learnt what they know of music in Australia—this should cause a thrill of pride among the residents of this colony, and the more so from the fact that he large number of vocalists brought together, and so well drilled in a short time. The building is admirably suited for concerts of such magnitude, and the sound travels well even under the wings; indeed the soloists are heard with remarkable distinctness, and will not be affected by a large audience, as last night some 2600 persons were in the building, and their presence caused no perceptible counteresticas. The organ, as we stated a few days ago, has been completed, and possesses sufficient power to line secretive specification:—Two manuals, compass CC to D, 27 notes; and a pedal organ, compass CC to D, 27 notes. General satisfaction is expressed at the news brought by the Omeo from the Northern Territory of the active commencement of the overland telegraph on that side.

The Anglo-Australian Telegraph Bill sets forth that the line is to be completed by the 1st of December, 1871, under a penalty of £70 per day, and provides for a grant from the Government of all necessary lands for stations; and that the charge for messages on the land line shall not exceed the rate per mile which shall then be the average rate charged in New South Wales, Victoria, and South Australia. There is no clause binding the company to any scale of cable charges.

THE PERMISSIVE LIQUOR LAW.

[COMMUNICATED.]

Mn. Wearne's Bill for restricting the retail of liquor, a first instalment of what its advocates are pleased to call a "Permissive Liquor Law," has been already discussed at several highly respectable public meetings as well as debated at some length in Parliament. The measure has the advantage of being supported by intelligent, honest, and respectable advocates. The measure, too, is a very moderate one companed with others which have been proposed on the same subject. It applies to municipalities only, and the sale of fermented and spirituous liquors which it enables the ratepayers of a given Municipality to prohibit within its limits, is only the "Common Retail Sale" (words, by the way, somewhat wanting in distinctness) of such liquors. If what is called the "permissive principle" is to be introduced at all, it could hardly be applied in a milder or more guarded form. Mr. Wearne's bill has the further advantage of being brought forward as a Legislative remedy for one—perhaps the most grievous—of our social plaques, for the cure of which legislation has as yet done next to nothing. Earnest advocates of temperance feel halireluctant to dispute the wisdom of a measure which professes to enable the temperate. Moreover, the petitioners in favour of the bill generally begin by positions which are undeniably true; especially by tracing much of the cvil complained of to the abuses of the licensing system. It must, however, often be our duty, after travelling some way with those who profess to be bound for the same place with ourselves, to part company with them, and keep to a highroad, though long and tedious, rather than hazard a little known and dangerous short cut which threatens to involve us in sundry trespasses. Only let us trave in harmony while we can, and part, if we must part, in all kindness.

We have no doubt that the cause of sobriety, here and elsewhere, has been much retarded by needless antagonism between the advocates of simple temperance and where they cease to oc-operate may retain

There will be faction-fights, of course; a standing domand for special constables, with a constant difficulty in finding neutrals for the office. The neutral, in fact, will have as hard a time of it as the bat in test able; everywhere there will be two hostile camps, and the "Liquorists" and "Watermen," or whatever other cant names mutual aversion may suggest; will be as bitter foes as ever were the "Hocks" and "Kabble-jaws" of pugnacious memory in Holland.

It may of course be said that we must be prepared for sharp fighting if we wish to vin a great victory. But will this bill really give to those districts which avail themselves of its provisions a real victory over intemperance to rather—for it will avail us little that one locality be made better at the cost of making its neighbours worse—will each successive adoption of the principle substantively lessen the aggregate of intemperance in the colony? Were this sure or even probable, one would be sorely tempted to wink at a bad precedent in legislation, and "To do a great right, do a little wrong."

But we fail to see the probability. There is, in the first place, an instinctive spirit of resistance to arbitrary rule in all British communities, which will oppose itself to the working of a measure like this. Secondly, it will leave large legitimate demand unsatisfied, while it will deprive a powerful body of their accustomed profits from the supply. These two causes together are sure to suggest endless methods of evading the prohibition. Further, as the retail trade alone is to be stopped, many will be tempted for the first time in their lives to buy, or club together in buying, two gellons of wine or spirits at once—a very doubtful means of promoting temperance in persons not used to have a large supply under their own roof. Yet, again, a seeming improvement where the actual defends of wine respirits at once—a very doubtful means of promoting temperance in persons not used to have a large supply under their own policious will not adopt the law; and if they d
